Finding a job | Article

One of the most popular ways to find a job is through your personal contacts; friends or family. This way you might hear about a job vacancy before other job seekers do.

Many companies consider staff referral to be a very quick and reliable way to recruit new employees.

Another way to hear about job vacancies is through online networking; joining a career networking site to make useful contacts and be notified of interesting job listings.

When applying for a job, you really need to sell yourself to the employer. It isn't enough to simply satisfy the criteria that they are looking for. Most of the other job applicants will also possess the required skills and experience so you really need to stand out from the crowd. It is essential to give well-informed answers at interviews. Try joining a few online discussion groups in order to keep up with current issues and key terminology. This may enhance your profile and even draw the attention of recruiters.

A careers fair will give you a golden opportunity to make useful professional contacts; to talk to a number of employers about the career prospects they offer and the career path you could follow. Remember to create a positive first impression!

A quick way to find a job can be to sign up with a recruitment agency. It will actively search the jobs market on your behalf and send your C.V. to potential employers. Even if the agency cannot immediately find you the right permanent position, it might be able to offer you a temporary post to help you get your first foot in the door.
